The Jim Crow Museum of Racist Memorabilia is proud to announce the release of its first documentary film, entitled, Jim Crow's Museum. This film is a fast-paced thirty minute documentary that explores the relationship between Jim Crow segregation and everyday objects that belittled African Americans. Caricatured images of Blacks on postcards, games, ashtrays, drinking glasses and other common items portrayed Africans and their American descendants as buffoons, obedient servants, savages, predators, and cultural parasites. These derogatory images both shaped and reflected the values of the Jim Crow Era. This documentary, produced by David Pilgrim, Curator of the Jim Crow Museum, and Clayton Rye, an award-winning filmmaker, introduces the viewer to the work done at the museum. Be warned: Many of the images in the documentary are disturbing and hard to watch.
