

Earlier this year I was nominated for the president's position at Northern Kentucky University. After nine years as president at Ferris, this seems a reasonable time to consider whether I should seek to remain at Ferris for the remainder of my career, which has been my intent and one to which I have devoted my time and energies. After an initial visit to NKU I have accepted their invitation to interview on campus so they can learn more about me and I can learn more about them.

If you are a reader of the university-wide messages I send, you know how much I value Ferris as a truly unique institution of higher learning. I am very proud of the many things you have accomplished and remain dedicated to Ferris State University and its future, which I believe is ascending and bright.

I very much appreciate your understanding as Patsy and I explore a situation that we did not until very recently anticipate. Whatever the outcome of this current situation, our strength as a community that works together for the benefit of our students will serve us in the best possible way. Thank you for your patience during this time.
