The Higher Education Act (HEA) prohibits colleges and universities from sharing data from either the Student Aid Report (FAFSA Results) or the National Student Loan Data System, for the purpose of determining student eligibility for private scholarships. Further, HEA prohibits sharing data with agencies that use FAFSA or NSLDS information to determine eligibility for their services. Although these HEA regulations have been in effect for a number of years, recent guidance from the Department of Education has required universities to review and reform practices and policies to conform to the HEA regulations.

The types of information that are typically requested for the purposes outlined above are available to the student through the MyFSU communications portal. Students may follow the directions below to access and provide the information to the requestor. The most commonly requested types of information include:

- Cost of Attendance for the aid period
